Joe Wicks: 'Exercise for your mental health and the body will follow'

Joe Wicks, 34, the nation's go-to body coach during the pandemic, kept millions on their toes. Later this month he launches The Workout Badges, a series of short, energetic workouts for preschoolers on YouTube. As part of his same drive to inspire children to exercise, Wicks is bringing out a picture book, The Burpee Bears, on 30 September.

by Kate Kellaway

- A Massively – I'm always exercising in front of them, although my little boy, Marley, is only 18 months old. I also have a three-year-old girl, Indie, and love it when she copies me... My passion is with helping young people – through exercise – to change the way they feel.
- B I love being playful. Exercise doesn't have to be serious. But it was very tiring making the series because of Covid. I had to film with each child separately because of social distancing rules.
- C The message with children always has to be: "Do your best. If you can't do it perfectly, have a try." Don't judge yourself. Don't compare yourself.
- D I've never been overweight. I was a skinny child who loved PE and sport. I used exercise as a coping mechanism...
- E It's an uplifting story about a bear family who go on a wonderful day out in the woods. It's about getting active and having fun (and getting caught in the rain)...
- F I became successful because my workouts were 20 minutes long and my recipes 15 minutes. I wanted to show people that they can lead a healthy life with minimal effort.
- G Most recently, yes. I did the lockdown [workout] stuff, fine. Then I did two podcast series and filmed a documentary about my childhood with Louis Theroux's production company. By the end, I was so emotionally drained I felt I'd nothing more to give.
- H There are days when it wears me down, not so much my posts as messages from people who are struggling. I try to reply. I'm constantly giving out energy. But I can put my phone away. The first few hours I'll miss it, but as each hour passes I feel lighter: I'm not in demand, no one can reach me... it's a nice feeling.
- I My family has brought me contentment, confidence and security. Whatever happens from this point on, even if I'm not relevant or popular I've got my family, so everything will be fine.
- J I've got an ice machine, a metal bath I fill from the hose and then I throw in lots of ice. I'll lie in there for four or five minutes and it's amazing. Nothing brings you more into the moment than freezing water.
- K I do have days when I do emotional eating and sit on the sofa. But I love those days. I don't feel ashamed. I'll think: that's just one day. I don't let it drag on. I know life is better with good sleep, good food and movement: I'll get up, have a workout, get back into the mindset.

How we met: 'I hitchhiked to Kathmandu and spent days searching for her'

Nancy Guri Duncan, 75, and François Le Diascorn, 73, met in India while they were travelling as reporters in 1971. They live together in the south of France.

by Lizzie Cernik

In 1971, Nancy Guri Duncan was working as a freelance journalist in south-east Asia. "I'm from the US, __0__," she says. "That summer, I went to Chennai (then known as Madras) in India to meet a friend from the US. We travelled together to Kolkata (then Calcutta) and arrived at a Salvation Army guesthouse." They were told to wait in the breakfast area __18__. A few minutes later, François Le Diascorn joined them at their table with another young Frenchman. "At the time, we were trying to start our careers as war photographers," he says. "We'd come to India because we were interested in investigating the conflict on the Indian-Pakistani border."

That evening, Nancy and François talked about their careers and future plans. "I was smitten that night," she admits. "François seemed like the sort of person I could be with." However, he and his friend were leaving the following day to travel to the border. "I was really upset, __19__. It wasn't much to go on." François also liked Nancy, but thought it was an "impossible" situation. "She was American, I was French and we were both going to be in different places. I didn't see how it could work."

He left the next day, but didn't get far. The two men were forced to return to the Kolkata guesthouse __20__. "My friend told me she'd spotted the Frenchmen again, so we rushed down to the dining room," Nancy says. "We were able to spend a few days together." She had committed to taking her friend to Kathmandu in Nepal, but said she would be back in a couple of weeks to see François.

In the event, he did not have to wait that long. "I don't remember why, __21__," he says. "I knew I wanted to see Nancy again, so we hitchhiked to Kathmandu and I went from hotel to hotel trying to find her." He searched for days before eventually hiking up to a temple overlooking the city. "François spotted us on our bikes below and he raced down to find us," says Nancy. "The moment he came to find me, we both knew this was it."

The couple spent the next few months travelling in Asia __22__, and François went back to France. Before they separated, they had the "incredible experience" of interviewing and photographing the Dalai Lama together.

In the spring of 1972, Nancy moved to Paris so they could be together. After a brief stint in the US, they decided to make France their permanent home. They married at the city hall in Montmartre seven years later, followed by a picnic on the Seine. "We lived in Paris for more than 40 years __23__" she says. They spent much of their time travelling the world together, with Nancy continuing her work as a reporter and François pursuing his photography career. "Travelling with another person is a test to see __24__," he says. Luckily, they both passed.

"We even managed to get a second interview with the Dalai Lama in 1981 and we stayed in the same guesthouse," says Nancy. "We've had a lot of adventures together." She loves her husband's sense of humour. "From the moment I watched him leave Kolkata the first time, I knew he was someone I could share a life with. He is such a good companion." She has always supported François' work, and helps wherever she can. "Nancy would always point out interesting things when we travelled," he says. "She's positive, determined and courageous. __25__ she did when we first met."

"We never wanted money, just adventure," Nancy says. "I am so lucky that he came to find me that day in Kathmandu."
