NATHAN HALE HIGH SCHOOL

Students at Nathan Hale High School in Seattle love their independence. For them independence means they can choose which lessons they want to go to, they have their own websites and they even grow their own fruit and vegetables.

The students who go to this school are very proud to be American. The inside of the school is painted red, white and blue – the same pattern as the American flag. The name of the school is also important. Nathan Hale was a hero in the American War of Independence.

As well as regular lessons like English, maths and science, students can study more non-traditional subjects. There are lessons in auto repair, photography, jewellery-making and broadcasting. There is also a greenhouse, where students grow fruit, vegetables and flowers. At the weekend, people can come to the greenhouse and buy the flowers.

All the students have e-mail and many of them have their own websites. The school has over 300 computers. Everyone has computer lessons, and many students learn how to use computers for design and graphic art. Students in journalism write for the school's publication, Stand.

Like most teenagers, the students at Nathan Hale like their privacy. The school has a health clinic, so the teenagers can talk to a doctor in private. It means that if you have a problem, you can get help without worrying your parents.

When school is over, most students go to summer camp. Camps can be one week long or they can last for the whole summer. There are two kinds of camps – general and speciality. In general camps, campers play sport and do outdoor activities, like climbing or sailing. In speciality camps, kids spend their time doing one kind of activity only.

“Going to the camp is important because you become more self-confident”, say most American teenagers who visit different high schools across the state. Many decide to go back the next year.

THE SHAPE OF A STAR

"It's time!" Mom calls from the house. We leave the snowman half finished. Our boots are wet, but we run inside anyway. It's time for Dad to call.

Today is Christmas Eve and he promised to call us at this hour. That makes it just past midnight Christmas morning in the desert on the other side of the world. That is where Dad is. That is where war is. But the phone does not ring.

Mom says, "We can eat lunch while we wait. Abby, help me set the table, please."

I put plates on the table while my sister, Elissa, sits. I make sandwiches and show Elissa how to create a Christmas star. Dad loves to look at stars. He and I look at them in the night sky through his telescope, so he always cuts our sandwiches into stars on Christmas Eve.

I take my time eating my star sandwich. Elissa finishes hers. Still, the phone is quiet.

"No sense just sitting here," Mom says at last. "Dad will call when he can. Don't worry." But I am worried. We leave the kitchen, even though we do not want to.

The box Dad sent for us arrived two weeks ago. We put it in the corner of the living room. His Christmas is there, where it is hot. Our Christmas is here, without him.

"Do you think Dad got the present we sent?" Elissa asks me.

"Sure he did," I tell her, even though I wonder the same thing.

"Girls," Mom voice tries to be cheerful as she comes out of the kitchen, "Let's put up the tree!"

Mom and I twist the tall pine tree into its stand. Then we test the lights. They light up the room. Dad usually puts them all over himself, then dances around singing. We hang the Christmas decorations on the tree, then talk about the memories they bring back – last year's Christmas and the year before.

Then the phone rings. Mom answers. She holds the phone in the air, and we can all hear Dad say, "Merry Christmas, everyone!"

"Merry Christmas to you, too, Dad!" Elissa and I shout out.
